The two-story home is built in high-quality tropical hardwoods including teak milled from this same property (where there is more to harvest). Just a few years old, the home has four bedrooms and two baths. It has gorgeous views from its second story deck and all the expected amenities.

A four-car covered garage includes a guest room and bathroom and a secure bodega, 50 meters from the main home. Just 150 meters from the Palo Seco public road, the well-groomed driveway winds through the gardens to the home, which is hidden from the street, private and secure, yet still easy to access.

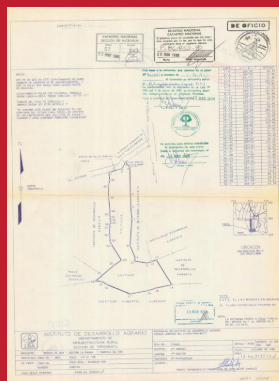

Behind the back yard and beyond the series of ponds where the caiman keep the tilapia population in check beneath the lotus pads and purple blossoms, the mountains rise forested to an elevation of 80 meters. An unimproved road was pushed previously to the mountain top, where a second building site with stunning gulf views is available should the buyers wish to segregate or built another home.

The property has a mature teak plantation with 300 trees ready for cutting and milling, no permit needed, ready to go. A gorgeous stream crosses the property and even winds its way across the flat front of the property within 30 meters of the house beside the lawn.

With the home construction completed in 2010 and the garage in 2011, the structures are all new and in pristine condition.

Words do not do Estrella del Sur justice...
